

RUSH: Beyond the Improbable

If something changed in you after discovering Rush, I truly believe this is the place you'll appreciate.

After watching the Rush in Rio DVD in 2004, I realized that something had changed in my life. The guitarist crafted the sound, the drummer played with absurd precision, and the bassist sang incredibly high with a fascinating timbre I had never heard before... three guys making that sound—it was truly the most impressive band performance I had ever seen.

Since then, Rush has become something beyond music, and I'm very happy I discovered them without following trends or needing to join a specific group. It was natural; it's real.

It was about discovering more about the lyrics, understanding that micro-grand cosmos of the power trio, the grandeur, and what I always say: the improbability of it having happened. A band hailing from a country outside the conventional axis of renowned 70s musicians, the absolute dedication to musical quality and complexity, the sincere friendship between the three of them. An improbable trio.

Over the years, my journey has revolved around creating content about Rush. I've met and made many friends in this universe, just as I bet you have too. I went to many fan festivals (including the biggest in the world - @RushFest), gave a platform to cover bands to promote their work, collected around 40 or 50 shirts, read countless books, met some of the band's crew, and partnered with a publisher. When my son got sick at just one year old, creating content about Rush helped me find my footing when the ground opened up beneath me.

To help fund all this work, I created the Portal Rush Brasil, a brand that is officially registered as a fan club (although I personally don't appreciate that nomenclature).

A creative fan, not a starstruck one.

I enjoy listening to Rush, studying, feeling, and creating within that universe. Now we've arrived at this digital stage, where more fans and future fans will get to know and contribute to my work, and our work. Check out our challenge.

YYZ hugs!

Tânios Rush Acácio - Creator of Portal Rush Brasil.

Learn more about my story on the biggest Rush podcast in the world.